1. Siam can be saved only by a dictatorship. A benevolent dictator should take over, round up corrupt officials and dangerous politicians, control radio and the press, and enforce an era of good government. Siam today is in the hands of a chronically dishonest ten percent of the population. The fifteen percent who cannot be corrupted must take over and swing the seventy-five percent bulk of the population back to honesty. The neutral seventy-five percent will follow the leadership of the honest fifteen percent, or at least they can be made to follow. The "good" fifteen percent should deal mercilessly with the corrupt ten percent and with the neutral seventy-five percent, at least until matters are cleaned up.
